Interpretation of your request.

We have interpreted your request as referring to situations in which information is passed to a third party as a result of concerns about a health practitioner.

Complaints to regulatory authorities

ACC may release information held on clients claim file as part of a notification to a regulatory authority. These notifications are undertaken where there are concerns about the competency of a health practitioner. ACC can become aware of concerns from clients, other providers and ACC staff.

Section 34 of the Health Practitioners Competence Assurance Act 2003 (HPCA)

Under Section 34 of the HPCA Act, ACC can notify the appropriate regulatory authority where concerns that represent a risk of harm to the public about the competency of a health professional have been identified.

It is rare for claimant information to be released in these cases, as relevant information supplied to authorities is clinical information directly relevant to the risk of harm notification, and no personal identifiers are released. ACC staff will get in touch with clients where their information is to be released if they have specified that they do not want their information to be disclosed outside of ACC.

It is important to note that Rule 11, sub rule 2(c)(i) and d(i) of the Health Information Privacy Code 2020 allows for information to be disclosed to an authority without informing clients where the information does not identify the individual involved, and where the disclosure is necessary to prevent or lessen a serious threat to public health or safety.

Professional Conduct Committee requests (not ACC initiated)

ACC may also release information held on a claim file on request from a Professional Conduct Committee (PCC). These are investigatory bodies set up by a regulatory authority in response to risk of harm notifications, made by ACC or other parties. Committees make these requests under sections 76 and 77 of the HPCA, that allows the committee to receive any documentation that is relevant to the investigation of the risk of harm. Section 78 of the HPCA requires that any parties that receive a request for information under section 76 and 77 are obligated to provide it.

It is important to note that the Privacy Act 2020 does not apply in these cases. However, where information is released under Section 78 of the HPCA, ACC undertakes a privacy check to remove any information that is not relevant to the notification, including personal identifiers. Often, the committee are already aware of client names and these are mentioned as part of the request. Where the names are already known, redaction becomes unnecessary. Any other personal identifiers will be removed.

The type of information most commonly provided is the ACC45 injury form, providers clinical records (if held and relevant), treatment injury reports and clinical reports.

Notifications regarding non-regulated professions

Where the notification relates to a non-regulated profession (such as acupuncturists or counsellors), information is released to their membership organisation about a provider. The Privacy Act 2020 applies in these cases. Any requests for claim information from these organisations would be treated as an Official Information Act or Privacy Act request, and personal information would not be provided.

Risk of harm notification for treatment injury

Under section 284 of the Accident Compensation Act 2001, ACC are required to notify regulatory authorities of a potential risk of harm to the public by a health practitioner. Section 284 subsection (2) allows that any relevant information must be reported to the appropriate authority, including claimant information. The Privacy Act and Health Information Privacy Code do not apply in such cases and ACC is not obliged to advise claimants of this disclosure. This does not mean that clients are not advised, as it is sensible course of action, however there is no requirement to do so in these circumstances.

How ACC records risk of harm information

Information that has been disclosed to a regulatory authority by ACC are recorded in ACC's internal claim file system, Eos. Unfortunately, this means that we are unable to easily determine the instances where claim file information has been disclosed to regulatory authorities. There are thousands of risk of harm notifications and the way that the notifications are recorded does not immediately identify whether any information from a claim file was used in the notification.

As a result, a manual review of individual claim files would be required to identify both whether claim information had been passed to a regulatory authority, whether clients were contacted to ask about the use of their information, and, whether permission was granted or not. As the information cannot be made available without substantial collation or research, we are refusing this part of your request under section 18(f) of the Act.
