Please note that results for all questions except #3 are provided by headcount.

4. The total number of places that could be offered to the programme:

The number of places available reflects the number of students that were admitted (answer 2B above). As these results show, the number can vary from year to year but is generally around 190. It depends on several factors, including the number of clinical placements available (a factor outside our control), the number of returning students in the programme, and the number of students returning after a leave of absence.
