Hello _____

The Office of the Privacy Commissioner presents free, occasional, lunchtime Technology & Privacy (T&P) forums (<https://privacy.org.nz/forums-and-seminars/technology-and-privacy-forums/>). I understand that Annabel Fordham spoke to you _____, a few months back about speaking opportunities for GCSB and SIS. We are at the planning stage for the next T&P Forum and so I'm making contact with you to see whether Una might be interested in presenting.

We are looking to deliver the next forum late August/early September. Speakers talk for about 30-45 minutes to a mixed public/private sector audience of up to 80 attendees (our usual venue is at the National Library Thorndon room). We often get media attendance too so the events have wider outreach potential to get some positive messages out.

It would be ideal if you could come back to me in the next week or so about whether Una is interested.

Regards

Colin

Hi there Colin,

Una's brief bio is attached.

We don't normally use slides, but happy for speaking notes to be published.

Happy to take questions, but would prefer that they are from non-media people who don't get much opportunity to engage with us. The media can, and do, make requests through the comms team.

And we're comfortable with the presentation being videoed.

And the outline of the speech will come in the next week or so, I hope.

Hi _____

Great! The 12-1pm booking for 11 September at the National Library has been confirmed.

The next step is for you to draft a 1-2 paragraph outline of the talk along with a short Bio for Una. We can include a small photo of Una on the flyer if you wish (we have included a photo for some recent speakers). I would like to get the flyer out on or about 14 August so I'd like you draft words sometime between now and 12 August.

In terms of topic/content we don't want to limit your thinking – we are happy to provide input to your ideas.

Resource wise, National Library has audio and a projector. We can provide a laptop for a presentation or you can bring your own to connect to their projector. Una can just speak without any presentation too.

There is wifi internet access available onsite which is ok for general internet access – I wouldn't want to rely on it as the backbone of a presentation.

Given Una's position I have some points to clarify:

1. Will Una be happy to take questions from the audience, including potentially from media?
2. If there are presentation slides will they be able to be published afterwards?
3. Will Una be comfortable for the event to be filmed – a video of the presentation would be published on PrivacyNZ account on YouTube.

Regards,

Colin

Hi

I have checked on venue availability and the Friday 28th, Friday 4th, Friday 11th dates are available. All the dates are ok from our perspective. Our practice is to have at least 3 weeks lead in time to advertise an event so if the 28 August is preferred we would need to have an outline of the talk and a Bio in time to get a flyer out by Friday 7th August (Friday week). The September dates might be more do-able if you think this might be a bit tight and you need some planning time to work out content/scope.

To secure the venue I need you to confirm back to me reasonably soon. I will check back in with National Library and see if they will hold those dates for a couple of days though.

[UNCLASSIFIED]

Hi Colin,

As requested, here is a short outline of what Una Jagose will speak about the Technology and Privacy Forum on 11 September:

Acting Director of the Government Communications Security Bureau (GCSB) Una Jagose will discuss cyber-security in New Zealand. In particular, Ms Jagose will cover trends in cyber-attacks, why cyber-attacks succeed, and what organisations can do to protect themselves. She will describe what GCSB does to deal with cyber threats, including outlining the CORTEX programme. Ms Jagose will also discuss some of GCSB's other functions, including its role in the Telecommunications (Interception Capability and Security) Act, as well as the importance of oversight and transparency in all GCSB's work.

Please let me know if you require anything else.

Subject: Small change in venue location

Hi all

Due to the level of interest in Una's talk we have arranged an alternative venue (Co-create space) at the National Library of NZ (allowing an extra 40 seats). The new location is at the back of the ground floor foyer (use Molesworth street main entrance). There will be a couple of signs and staff to direct people to the right place. The previous venue was the lower ground floor (access from Aitken street).

Regards

Colin

Subject: Outline of Una Jagose speech for 11 September

[UNCLASSIFIED]

Hi Colin,

As requested, here is a short outline of what Una Jagose will speak about the Technology and Privacy Forum on 11 September:

Acting Director of the Government Communications Security Bureau (GCSB) Una Jagose will discuss cyber-security in New Zealand. In particular, Ms Jagose will cover trends in cyber-attacks, why cyber-attacks succeed, and what organisations can do to protect themselves. She will describe what GCSB does to deal with cyber threats, including outlining the CORTEX programme. Ms Jagose will also discuss some of GCSB's other functions, including its role in the Telecommunications (Interception Capability and Security) Act, as well as the importance of oversight and transparency in all GCSB's work.

Please let me know if you require anything else.

Thanks,

Colin Trotter

Hi Mason,

The Technology and Privacy event on September 11th (I've attached the flyer) has been moved to another room within the National Library. It is now in the Co-create Room which is through the main entrance, last room on the right hand side. It is bigger. We were booked out within minutes (because it is about the GCSB). So we've decided to use the bigger space so we can accommodate up to 120 people. It shouldn't present any difficulties for you. Let me know if you want to see it before hand and I'll arrange to meet you there.

All the best,

Charles

Update – John suggests we release the post on Monday to lead into Una's T & P forum on Friday – see new 2nd and 3rd sentence.

John, see near the end new sentence about Cheryl presenting to the international conference – hope it conveys your suggestion

Surveillance, spies and secrecy

2015 has been a busy year for the intersection of privacy, security and intelligence.

I'm looking forward to welcoming Una Jagose, acting Director of the GCSB, to our regular Privacy and Technology forum this week on the topic of Cyber-security in New Zealand.

In May, I introduced the Director of the SIS, Rebecca Kitteridge, before her address to the Identity Conference on the topic "Is the NZSIS interested in you? Privacy in the security world". The text of her speech is here.

I was invited to address the annual conference of intelligence professionals in July and gave a speech about "Privacy versus Security: the False Dichotomy and the Myth of Balance".

I talked about the importance of appropriate oversight and accountability for secretly used powers, and challenged the commonly asserted idea that security and privacy are values that can be traded off against each other. The full text of the speech is here.

I've blogged here about my oversight role of the SIS and the GCSB. These agencies aren't subject to the same complaints processes as other government agencies, but citizens do have the right to seek access to any personal information that they may hold, and to seek to have that information corrected (privacy principles 6 and 7). My office can carry out a review of access and correction complaints.

Independent review of intelligence and security

My office made a submission to the review last month and I was invited to talk to the independent reviewers of intelligence and security (Sir Michael Cullen and Dame Patsy Reddy) about how the legislation governing the SIS and the GCSB might be improved.

One of the questions the review is grappling with is what forms of communication should be considered to be “private” (and need a warrant to be intercepted) and whether some communications may not need the same level of privacy protection. A live issue for the review is how metadata should be treated.

Our submission makes 5 key recommendations:

- To bring the SIS and GCSB in line with standard governance and accountability frameworks (such as the privacy principles), subject to specific exceptions rather than general carve-outs
- To clarify and strengthen the privacy standards for communications and metadata
- To include explicit safeguards and procedures for all privacy intrusive powers (such as bulk interception)
- To strengthen oversight of international information sharing by the intelligence agencies (such as the 5 eyes alliance)
- To create an Oversight Board of experts (including the Inspector General) to co-ordinate oversight of the SIS and the GCSB.

The full submission is here.

So far I’ve seen thoughtful submissions from the Law Society, Amnesty International and the Human Rights Foundation, and Internet NZ.

They make for interesting reading and I hope the reviewers find them useful. They also raise some important issues for public debate.

Issues about privacy, surveillance and national security are also raised in recent Law Commission reviews.

Our submission to Extradition and Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters is here.

Our submission to National Security Information in Proceedings is here.

International insights

New Zealand is not alone in examining the powers and controls on intelligence agencies.

There are a number of recent reports from the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, Canada and the United States that analyse the current problems and recommend a range of solutions.

The Dutch Review Committee on the Intelligence and Security Services has put its finger on one key weakness – the limits of national oversight in a security environment that increasingly relies on intelligence sharing across national borders. They’ve called this issue “the accountability deficit”.

This is one of the issues that I’ll be discussing with international colleagues at next month’s International Conference of Data Protection and Privacy Commissioners in Amsterdam [link to conference page]. Cheryl Gwyn, New Zealand’s Inspector-General of Intelligence and Security, will be presenting to that conference and it will be an opportunity for her and I to hear and share insights with comparable oversight agencies in other jurisdictions.

Clearly more thinking still has to be done on how we equip our intelligence agencies to protect the State, without sacrificing individual human rights.

It’s an important question for our time and one that deserves the ongoing critical attention of the public and Parliament.
